

FRENCH AND ITALIAN STUDIES

The study of French and Italian language and culture is more important than ever. Italy and France are core members of the European Union and important players in the global economy. French is spoken daily by an estimated 212 million people worldwide and is an official language in 29 countries across five continents. Italian ranks fifth among all languages studied in the US, while French ranks second. Both languages open up many doors to students interested in international careers.

Education

The Department of French and Italian Studies (FIS) has among the largest number of French majors of any university on the West coast and boasts a vibrant Italian program. Recently revised curricula in both wings of FIS have invigorated undergraduate study, articulating coursework in the department with exciting new areas of study at the UW in Environmental Humanities, Digital Humanities, Socio-linguistics, Translation, and Film and Media.

Nearly 2300 students enroll in FIS courses every year, from elementary through advanced language courses, to upper division courses on Dante and the Middle Ages, Science Fiction, Italian film, Immigrant Cultural Production, and the Cultures of Franco-America, to graduate seminars in Qualitative Research and Textual and Digital Studies. In these courses, students learn language and research skills that are essential to succeeding in the 21st-century global workplace.

In addition, FIS offers exciting study abroad programs and exploration seminars for undergraduates in Paris, Nantes, Martinique, and Italy. Travel support for conferences and research is available to graduate and undergraduate students in FIS.

Research

FIS faculty engage in cutting-edge research in a range of fields and time-periods. This work covers France, Italy, the Caribbean, Francophone Africa, and Québec and employs a range of approaches from ethnographic fieldwork to literary and cultural analysis to archival research. Current projects explore the early manuscript traditions of Dante's works; images of women in Renaissance portrait books; the politics of water usage and consumption in the French Antilles; multilingualism among Senegalese immigrants in Paris, Rome and New York; the history of literacy and typography in the 17th and 18th centuries; French cultural attitudes towards animals; and modern Italian cinema.

Recently books published by FIS faculty include The Poetry of Place: Mapping France in Sixteenth-Century Lyric, recognized by the MLA for honorable mention for the Scaglione Prize; Hollow Men: Writing, Objects, and Public Image in Renaissance Italy; The Literary Market: Authorship and Modernity in the Old Regime; and Packaging Post/Coloniality: The Manufacture of Literary Identity in the Francophone World, as well as two novels recognized as important contributions to contemporary Quebecois literature.

Outreach

FIS places a high priority on outreach to the Northwest community. Departmental benefactors include distinguished representatives of the regional French and Italian communities. We regularly schedule lectures, conferences, and film series open to the public, as well as workshops for K-12 teachers. We also have assisted local high schools with curriculum development. Our faculty work closely with the consulates for France and Italy and are actively involved in local organizations such as the French-American Chamber of Commerce, the Seattle-Nantes Sister City Association, SIFF, and the Dante Alighieri Society. In addition, many of our graduate students and faculty volunteer for University Beyond Bars.
